There is a lot new to see at Knox Museum this season, including traveling exhibitions from the National Society of the Cincinnati, and the Gilder Lehrman Institute of American History.
(check website for exact dates)

The Noble Train of Artillery (below) Muralist Hope Angier's impressive 10' x 13' mural depicting one of Henry Knox's signature accomplishments - dragging 59 cannons from Fort Ticonderoga to Boston. On display in Montpelier's Reception Hall.

Today's Montpelier features the beautifully-appointed 18th century-style General's Bedroom, and The Knox Collections Room, where many of Knox Museum's treasured original Knox family pieces are displayed.

The officer's traveling case, made in France, and purportedly a gift from the Marquis de Lafayette to fellow officer and dear friend, General Henry Knox.

General Knox's Original Bedstead (below) Knox purchased the mahogany four-poster from Benjamin Frothingham Jr. of Charlestown, MA in 1796. The bed's restoration was completed in 2014 by East Point Conservation Studio and textile historian Natalie Larson.

The Knoxes retired to Thomaston in 1795, where they built Montpelier, the one-time grandest residence in the District of Maine. Today's iteration is an impressive architectural landmark in its own right.
